Proverbs for the Youth 1:8 to 9:18

This prologue forms the context for all the collections to follow (10:1 to 31:31). It is composed of eleven teachings from the father to his son, and two interludes by Wisdom (Hebrew: Sophia), a personification of the father's teaching to simpleminded (1:4), or inexperienced youth. These teachings and interludes are tributes to Wisdom, aiming to motivate the son and the simpleminded to embrace Wisdom in order to escape the easy money offered by wicked men and easy sex thrown at them by the seductress. The teachings of the father tend to assume the son's obedience, and the interludes of Wisdom tend to presume simpleminded disobedience.

Adolescence is the quest for a sense of identity. The son and simpleminded (1:4-5) stand on the threshold of adulthood. The time has come when they must make a decisive stand for the world view and values of their godly parents and sages. The two conflicting worldviews make their appeal of Wisdom and Foolishness, Good and just pretending to be Good, Life and Death. The son and the simpleminded must choose between them. These two competing views are each represented by two voices. On behalf of Wisdom's worldview, the father addresses the son in the home; however, Foolishness addresses the simplemindedness from the city gate. On behalf of Foolishness, wicked men offer fast money and the seductress offers easy sex. In a pitched battle, these combatants, through their speeches more than anything else, compete for the souls of the youth. The stakes are high. It's a matter of life and death. The two world views are also represented by the repeated metaphors of two paths (1:10-29 and 4:10-19) and two houses (2:18-19, 9:1-6 and 13-18). The father's way leads to life, but the way of evil men and carnal women leads to death. The house of Foolishness is the entrance into the house of death; whereas, the house of Wisdom leads to life. The son and the simpleminded are already on the road to life and death respectively. The son must persevere on the path of life, while the simpleminded still needs to choose it.

A decision needs to be made, one way or the other. The young man is most vulnerable to easy money and easy sex, for his sexual passions are now the strongest and his tendency to be wise in his own eyes, and paradoxically to have group approval, has not been toughened by reality. In other words, he hasn't had enough life experience. The invitations of his peer group and the seductress to persuade the son and the simpleminded to join them share a similar invitation to simply "Come!" Since no one can force someone to be righteous, the father uses all his persuasive powers to win his son to Wisdom and away from foolishness.²³
