The Kings of Isra'el

First Kings 15:25 to 16:34

Now the story shifts to the northern kingdom of Isra'el, where it will stay until the last verse of First Kings. Two issues dominate the narrative. First, rapid turnover in leadership becomes commonplace in Isra'el. Nothing was more characteristic of the northern kingdom than its extreme internal instability. Few failures could be more damaging to a new nation. Second, the power of the prophetic word emerges again. Predictions old and new come true. Prophets old and new call on kings to account for their actions, which indicates that God had not abdicated His role as LORD of history.<sup>383</sup>

The sins of Jeroboam were visited on seventeen of the other kings of Isra'el (to see link click Dd - Golden Calves at Dan and Bethel). Only one, Jehu, did not. Nevertheless, Isra'el got off on the wrong foot and never recovered. What is a holy God doing amidst all this evil? He is not there because He relishes in it - obviously He hates sin (Proverbs 6:16-19). But He is there because He is simply that kind of God. He is sovereign, and no moment in history, however given to evil, will find Him absent from it. Hence, here we meet evil men in the hands of a good God.<sup>384</sup> All this was a result of Solomon's sin of spiritual adultery (see Bx - Solomon's Wives).

While the capital of the Davidic dynasty remained in Jerusalem, the northern kingdom had several capital cities. The first administrative capital established by Jeroboam following the division of the monarchy was located at Shechem, located on the eastern side of the pass between Mount Ebal and Mount Gerizim (First Kings 12:25; Second Chronicles 10:1). The second northern kingdom capital was located at the Transjordan town of Penuel, a move possibly connected with Shishak's invasion of parts of Jeroboam's territory a few years into his reign (1 Kings 12:25; 2 Chronicles 12:1). After Penuel, Jeroboam set up a capital at Tirzah, located at the junction of important roads about six miles north of Shechem. Tirzah remained the capital city for the subsequent northern kingdom rulers until the establishment of Samaria during the sixth year of Omri's reign (879 BC). Not that Omri ruled for six years from Tizrah while battling against Tibni for control of the northern kingdom. Samaria remained the capital of the northern kingdom until its fall in 722 BC.<sup>385</sup>
