Order in Public Worship

14: 29-40

Order in public worship DIG: What guidelines does Paul give for speaking in tongues? Why? What guidelines did he give for prophesying? Why? When does it seem likely that prophecy ceased? What was Paul's concern regarding wives during public worship during the first century? Why did Paul have to defend his apostolic authority in such a strong manner?

REFLECT: How can you tell when people are more interested in exhibition than in building others up in your place of worship? How can you apply these lessons in order to public worship today? Is your worship team focused on entertaining you, or bringing you into the Most Holy Place, into the presence of ADONAI? How can you build someone up this week?

For God is not a God of confusion but of peace.

The Corinthian church had many serious problems. Like many believers today, they had great difficulty in not mimicking the unbelieving and corrupt society around them. They wanted to be in God's Kingdom, while keeping one foot in the kingdom of this world. They wanted to have the blessings of this life but hang on to the pleasures of the old. In other words, they wanted to have the best of both worlds, but Paul plainly warned them that that was impossible. Clearly, they were a mess. We have had twenty-one centuries learning how to “do church,” but in 55 AD, the Corinthian church was still in its infancy. The Word of God does not change, but cultures do change, and Paul was writing in the culture of his day.

Only after teaching broadly and presenting general principles in 12:1 to 14:25 does Paul give specific rules for the use of the verbal spiritual gifts of prophecy, tongues and interpretation of tongues in public worship. In doing so he follows his pattern in 8:1 to 11:1 (to see link click Bj - Concerning Our Freedom in Messiah), there, also, the general principles came at the end of the discussion concerning our freedom in Messiah.<sup>467</sup>

The primary emphasis in verses 26 through 40 is that the worship service should be conducted in an orderly fashion, contrary to what had been happening in Corinth up to that time. What is our conclusion, brothers? Whenever you come together, let everyone be ready with a psalm or a teaching or a revelation, or ready to use his genuine gift of tongues or give an interpretation. All of God’s spiritual gifts are beneficial if done in an orderly manner. But that was the problem. Everyone wanted to participate at the same time. They were not interested in serving, or learning, or building others up, but only in self-expression and self-glory. Everyone vied for attention and preeminence. Therefore, Paul directed their focus to others by telling them to let everything be for building up the Body of Messiah (14:26).

Tongues in public worship: If the true gift of tongues (Greek: glossa) is exercised, let it be by two or at most three, and each in turn; and let someone interpret (14:27). Such a command would not be fitting if Paul had in mind the pagan gibberish (see Dn - Pagan Gibberish is Unproductive) of a private prayer language. The Greek word for interpret is hermeneuo, which means translation as in John 9:7 and Hebrews 7:2. The gift of interpretation was a supernatural ability to translate a language one had never heard so that the congregation might be built up by the message (14:5). You cannot translate gibberish.<sup>468</sup>

However, an interpreter must be present if tongues were spoken. Although speaking in languages and translating them were distinct gifts, they were not to be used apart from each other. An interpreter could not exercise his gift unless someone was speaking in the genuine gift of tongues, and the speaker should not exercise his gift unless there was an interpreter present. Paul’s instruction assumed that the congregation knew which believers in the congregation had the gift of interpretation. Paul continued: And if there is no one present who can interpret, let the people who speak in tongues keep silent when the congregation meets. The rule was clear and simple: no interpreter . . . no speaking in tongues. In that case, a person who still felt compelled to speak was to meditate and pray. That is to say, they can speak silently to themselves and to God (14:28).

Prophecies in public worship: Judging from Paul's letters to Titus (64 AD) and Timothy (67-68 AD), prophets ceased to function in the Church even before the end of the apostolic age. In those letters he makes considerable mention of church leadership – elders, deacons, deaconesses, and bishops – but makes no mention of prophets. Along with the apostles, prophets were a part of the foundation of the early Church (Ephesians 2:20). And when Paul wrote to Corinth in 55 AD, prophets were still very central to the ministry there. In fact, nowhere in this letter is there mention of a pastor, elder, or overseer. Since prophets were leaders in the Corinthian church, Paul was compelled to give four regulations for prophesying:

First, let only two or three prophets speak at any given service (14:29a). Those prophets spoke for the Lord in two ways. In some instances, they gave new revelation from God to the church. And, by reiterating what the apostles taught, they also proclaimed what had previously been revealed, much as preachers and teachers of the Word do today.

Second, while some prophets spoke in public worship, the other prophets present were to weigh (Greek: diakrino, meaning to pass judgment) what they said (14:29b). The judging prophets may have had the gift of discernment (see Cq - The Distinguishing of Spirits), or they may have tested what was said with their word of knowledge (see Cl - The Word of Knowledge). In any case, they were collectively to evaluate the validity of the prophetic messages.

Paul reinforced the principle of prophets judging one another's messages by saying: The prophets' spirits are under the prophets' control. This can mean either that each individual prophet should not let himself or herself be carried away into unseemly behavior, or that the prophets as a group can exercise control as needed over individuals among their number. But clearly, uncontrolled ecstatic utterance had no place in the public worship, for God is not a God of confusion but of peace (14:32-33a). Here is the key to the whole chapter. Our worship of God should reflect the character and nature of YHWH. He is the God of shalom and harmony, not strife and confusion (Romans 15:33; 2 Thessalonians 3:16;

Hebrews 13:20). ADONAI cannot be honored where there is disharmony and competition, self-serving and self-glorifying. Chaos and discord in public worship is certain proof that the Ruach is not in control. Where the Spirit rules there is always shalom (James 3:14-18).<sup>469</sup>

In addition, believers must not play fast and loose with the issues of inspiration and revelation. An accurate understanding of those doctrines is essential for distinguishing between the voice of God and the human voice. In the past men who professed to speak for God, but spoke on their own opinions were to be executed (Deuteronomy 13:1-5). Since continuing revelation has ceased even before the canon of Scripture was completed, we are instructed to shun false prophets and heretics (First John 4:1).<sup>470</sup>

Third, and if something is revealed to a prophet who is sitting down, let the first one be silent (14:30). A new revelation took precedence over the reiteration of something that had already been taught. It was not that the truths in the new revelation were necessarily more important than those then being proclaimed, but, at that moment, the news should be heard while it was fresh from the Lord. That is not an issue in the Church today because the revelation aspect of the prophetic ministry ceased with the completion of the B'rit Chadashah. But apparently such conflicts in the early church sometimes occurred. When they did, the prophet with the new revelation was to be given the floor. To put it another way, when God spoke directly, everyone was to listen.

Fourth, whether to give new revelation or to reinforce previous revelation, the prophets were to prophesy one by one. Just as with speaking in tongues, it was essential that only one person speak at a time, with the result that all will learn something and all will be encouraged (14:31).<sup>471</sup>

Wives in public worship: As in all the congregations of God's people, let the wives remain silent when public worship the congregation meets; they are certainly not permitted to speak out. Paul urged that public worship not be turned into a disruptive question-and-answer session. It is very believable that these women assumed that prophets or prophetesses functioned much like the oracle at Delphi, who only prophesied in response to questions, including questions about purely personal matters. Paul argues that prophecy in the congregation of believers was different. Prophets and prophetesses spoke only in response to the prompting of the Ruach Ha'Kodesh. Paul, then, limited such questions to the home. Rather, let them remain subordinate, as also the TaNaKh (as a general principle) says; and if there is something they want to know, let them ask their own husbands at home (we assume that unmarried women or widows could ask the elders or other men in their own families). For it is shameful for a woman to [disrupt] a congregational meeting (14:33b-35). Paul wanted things done in an orderly manner. Apparently certain wives in the Corinthian congregation needed to hear this instruction. There were more than uncovered heads that were inappropriate in regard to their participation in public worship (see Bx - Man is Born of Woman), and Paul was not about to avoid those issues.<sup>472</sup>

Paul places his instruction precisely here in his letter because it is here that he is dealing with matters of decorum and order in public worship. His advice may seem curt and abrupt only if one ignores that he has already discussed the applicable general principles, and that the people asking this question were already familiar with the context of the problem, since they brought it up in the first place. If we could not supply such a framework for these verses, we might have to conclude, as some do, that Paul, under the inspiration of the Ruach Ha’Kodesh, was demeaning women. Or even worse, some even deny that First Corinthians 14:34-35 as authentic to the letter. That is a very slippery slope.

There are a number of places in the TaNaKh where a subordinate role for women is assumed or prescribed, although other places envision an equal or superior role. The Talmud reports that Rabbi El’azar ben-’Azaryah (early second century) gave a homily on the verse, “Assemble the people - the men, the women, and the little ones” (Deuteronomy 31:12), in which he said, “If the men came to learn, the women came to hear” (Chagigah 3a). To “learn” in Judaism is to study by discussing and thus to fully understand, because one’s questions get answered; whereas to “hear” is to listen to the discussion by not participate in it.<sup>473</sup>

There were times in informal meetings and Bible studies where it was entirely proper for men and women to share equally in exchanging questions and insights. Paul is not implying that women could not prophecy, teach, or pray at church. We know that there were women prophetesses (Acts 21:9), and in this very letter Paul permits women to pray and prophecy in public worship (11:5). But when the church came together in public worship God’s standards were clear: there needed to be order. Obviously many of the Corinthian believers, men and women alike, had opposed Paul on this matter. They were determined to follow their own principles and standards regardless of what the apostle or other mature leaders said. In its pride and arrogance, the church wanted to decide on its own what was godly and proper. They acted as if they had a corner on the truth and probably dared others to question them.

The Corinthians put themselves above Scripture, either by ignoring it or interpreting it in ways that fit their own preconceived notions. Therefore, Paul challenged them with his most biting and sarcastic words yet: Did the Word of God originate with you Gentiles? No! It originated with the Jewish people and the TaNaKh. Or are you the only people it has reached? (14:36). He said, in effect, "If you didn't write Scripture, then obey it! If you are not the sole receivers of God's Word, then subject yourselves to it as faithful children of God, as all the congregations of God are obliged to do." No believer has the right to overrule, ignore, alter, or disobey God's Word. No one is to put themselves above God's Word.

Then, Paul continued the challenge: If anyone thinks he is a prophet or is endowed with the Spirit, let him acknowledge that what I am writing you is a command of the Lord (14:37). In the context of what Paul has been focusing on with reference to prophets and tongues, it seems that spirituality must refer primarily to those who spoke in the true gift of tongues, the special spiritual language that the Corinthians valued so highly. His point was this, "If a person claims to be a prophet or to have the gift of tongues, or any other spiritual gift, the mark of his true calling and faithful ministry will be his acknowledging that what I teach as an apostle are the truths of God. If a person is truly called or gifted of God and was sincerely trying to follow Him, he will submit the exercise of that calling and gift to the principles God has revealed to me as His commandments." What Paul taught was not optional.

On the other side of the coin: But if someone doesn't recognize this, then let him remain unrecognized (14:38). This play on words carries the idea that anyone who disregards the Word should himself be disregarded. The mark of a false prophet (see the commentary on Second Corinthians Af - The Problem of the False Apostles) or a counterfeit of tongues, or of a person who misuses a true calling or gift, was his rejection of what Paul taught. Because such people rejected the apostle's teaching, they were rejected as legitimate servants of God. This emphasis on authority comes at an appropriate place in the book because so many Corinthian believers wanted to disregard Paul's words about order in public worship. Paul says that the church should reject such ignorant, disobedient, self-styled rejectors.

Paul concludes the chapter with a summary appeal for the Corinthians to hold prophecy, the teaching and preaching of God's Word (see Di - The Word that Builds Up), in the superior position of their public worship, but not to reject the legitimate speaking in tongues. So, my brothers, eagerly seek to prophesy and do not forbid speaking in tongues. The phrase do not forbid is in the plural and does not advocate individual

speaking in tongues, but refers to the church as a group allowing the proper gifts to be exercised. Tongues were a limited gift, both in purpose and duration, but it was the Lord's gift, and, as long as it was active, it was not to be despised or hindered. But let all things be done in a proper and orderly way (14:39-40).<sup>474</sup>
