

-Save This Page as a PDF-

David and Ziba

Second Samuel 16: 1-4

David and Ziba DIG: What did the shakeup in David's family mean to some of the descendants of Sha'ul? What was Ziba's motive in coming to David bearing such gifts? Is he trustworthy (Second Samuel 19:24-30)? Why does David think so (Second Samuel 9:1-11)? Did David make a mistake with Ziba? Why was he vulnerable to that mistake?

REFLECT: In contrast to the loyalty of Ittai to his master (Second Samuel 15:19-23), we have the example of Ziba. Have you ever been betrayed? If so, how did it affect you? Where might you be tempted likewise to betray your loyalties? How will you resist that temptation?

977 BC

This is part of a 24-hour period starting at 15:13 and extending all the way to 17:23.

When David had gone a short distance beyond the summit of the Mount of Olives, there was Ziba, the steward of Mephibosheth (to see link click Da - David and Mephibosheth) waiting to meet him. Ziba represented the family of Sha'ul and he might have imagined that the king would expect him to defect, and it was for that reason that he brought extravagant and ostentatious gifts to David. He had a string of donkeys saddled and loaded with two hundred loaves of bread, a hundred cakes of raisins, a hundred cakes of figs and a skin of wine (Second Samuel 16:1). Ziba wanted to demonstrate his loyalty to the king. It was a public act of siding with David in the civil war.

David was direct. He asked Ziba, "Why have you brought these?" There must be some motive for such unsought and unexpected generosity. Ziba was not forthcoming because his answer was no answer at all . . . only a statement of the obvious. He deftly dodged the question when he replied: The donkeys are for the king's wives to ride on, the bread and fruit are for the men to eat, and the wine is to refresh those who become exhausted in the wilderness (Second Samuel 16:2).<sup>395</sup>

Still skeptical, the king then probed further by asking him, “Where is your master’s grandson Mephibosheth?” Ziba was quick on the draw. His response – later indignantly denied by Mephibosheth – was that the crippled young man stayed in Jerusalem in the belief that the house of Isra’el would return the Kingdom to the house of Sha’ul and therefore Mephibosheth himself would benefit (Second Samuel 16:3).

Although Mephibosheth was heir to the throne (and even if such a claim might appear plausible to David), it was unlikely that he really believed that Absalom would actually turn the Kingdom over to him! Apparently Ziba either didn’t know or did not care that the kingdom of Isra’el had long ago been torn from Sha’ul by divine decree and given to David. Not only that, it was a bit risky if David checked out his story. But Ziba reasoned that the king was on the run and would not have time to check out his story. So basically, Ziba lied through his teeth to David and cleverly did his best to discredit and betray his young master. With one lie, the snake had put the loyalty of Mephibosheth into question, while simultaneously enhancing his own position.

David was weary and deeply wounded by Ziba’s lie, and it wasn’t the best time for him to be making character decisions. But in the heat of the moment, David impulsively chose to believe Ziba. Without hearing the other side of the story, David punished Mephibosheth in absentia by giving Ziba everything that formerly belonged to his master, saying: All that belonged to Mephibosheth is now yours (Second Samuel 16:4). This was everything Ziba had hoped for. By this one daring regal act, David sent a warning to other potential defectors that they risked the loss of their land. David’s longstanding promises to Y’honatan (First Samuel 20:14-17) and to Sha’ul (First Samuel 24:21-22) were suspended by his own need for self-preservation. In the fog of war the king had not violated the letter of earlier promises, but he had come dangerously close to a violation of chesed (see commentary on Ruth Af - The Concept of Chesed) against Sha’ul’s family.<sup>396</sup>

Not unexpectedly, Ziba’s response was submissive and grateful: I humbly bow. May I find favor in your eyes, my lord and king (Second Samuel 16:5). Mephibosheth had taught him well (Second Samuel 9:6 and 8). It is interesting to note that Ziba didn’t continue on with David. He likely had a hunch that David would survive Absalom’s coup; hence his show of support. But suppose Absalom won the civil war? No problem. Ziba was not exiled with David, but working the farm ready to live under a new regime. Ziba was a manipulator, and he capitalized on David’s trouble in order to enrich himself. What motivated Ziba was not loyalty to God’s king, but greed for his own gain.

During the Revolutionary War (1775-1783), George Washington’s Continental Army suffered through a miserable winter at Valley Forge. Clothes were so scarce and blankets so rare that the troops often sat up all night rather than fall asleep and freeze to death. Some of the soldiers, whose legs had frozen black, were taken to “hospitals” for amputation. Why such suffering? It was not the severe winter, for the winter was mild by Pennsylvania standards. But soldiers went hungry because nearby farmers preferred to sell to the British for hard cash. The army was half-naked because merchants in Boston refused to move government clothing off their shelves at anything less than profits ranging from 1,000 to 1,800 percent. The colonies swarmed with Ziba’s. The hardship of others was their opportunity for success.<sup>397</sup>